From the Atlantic to the Pacific, Canada is enormous in size, and offers lovely landscapes that include mountains, forests and lakes. There is much land still to be wandered in Canada, since about 90% of Canadians live within 160km of the US border.

Eco-tourists will be especially drawn to Canada's scenic, vast wilderness. One such place is Gatineau Park, an area that is protected for wildlife and which offers camping, biking and snowshoeing, all with a strict focus on education in conservation.

There are many Eco-tour operators in Canada, as well. Travel agents can also help you find Eco-friendly tours and trips in Canada. Tourism is a $71.5 billion industry in Canada. This is more than the fishery, forestry and agriculture industries combined. In 2009, 23% of money spent on tourism were by foreign travellers, while domestic travel expenditures reached $57 billion.

Some of the most breathtaking Eco-friendly tours include Wilderness Adventures in Arctic Canada, which will offer wondrous wildlife and wilderness for your camera as well as for your heart and your soul. This is one of the most remote places on the planet, and you may spot caribou, musk-oxen, wild wolves and even the Aurora Borealis

For a trip more along the agri-tourism lines, you can visit a 19th century family goat farm, in Manitoba. It is situated in front of a boreal forest, native prairie and riparian zones.

Eco-tours are offered in the coastal regions of Canada, near Vancouver Island, where you can wander through rainforest, along with seeing wildlife, marine life and birds. Your guide for some of these trips will be a trained biologist from Interpretation Canada.

Frontiers North has a Tundra Buggy Adventure that will take you to Churchill, Canada, where you can watch polar bears on the tundra. This is an image that may not be seen for many more years, so it’s all the more meaningful now.

You can also book Eco-tours in the Pacific Rainforest of Canada. You will have a guide who is an experienced naturalist, and you’ll have all the comforts of home with your 4-wheel drive travel to the remote beaches and spectacular rainforests of Vancouver Island.
